

Construction Law

Effective and efficient representation of those involved in construction disputes requires knowledge of, and experience with, the often intricate relationships between owners, design professionals, contractors, subcontractors, suppliers and sureties. It requires knowledge of public and private jobs and the sometimes complicated law applicable to each. And where litigation is required to prosecute or defend a client's interests, construction lawyers also need the ability and experience required in what is often complex litigation with numerous parties of varying interests, motivations, assets and claims.

At Bentz Law Firm, we have both the knowledge to understand the playing field in construction disputes and the experience in complex litigation, in both state and federal courts, required to achieve the best outcome possible for our clients. Our experience not only allows us to effectively litigate construction disputes, it very frequently also allows us to quickly and efficiently resolve them before they burden or impair our clients' businesses.
